Fusion deals with the idea of bringing two or more elements together in one final product. In this case, it was a dinner table. Designers asked themselves the question about what they could do to make it more fun and engaging. Human beings by nature believe that the best of social activities to enhance mingling is games. And what better game to play other than billiards? Pool for many is more than just a game. It's an obsession. The thrill that you get when you sit cross legged on the edge putting that last cigarette out in preparation to make the final kill is beyond words.

The Fusion Tables are dinner tables with a top that can be removed so that you can play billiards on the bottom section. Simply by removing the top turns the whole thing into a billiards buffet! It's not playing with your food. It's playing right under it! ■

Aramith, a Belgian brand under the umbrella of Armand Billiard Group, has designed the Fusion Tables showcasing it for many to see how they have integrated a billiards table with the standard of a modern dinner table. It's an interesting flirtation with fusion and very daring to the say the least. Yet, here it is.
